Bill,

This seems to be good news. All of us will sleep a little more soundly when we finally take this step. What will we do if we succeed in connecting Wang to our network?

NOTE FOR: DDA

Bill:

It's my understanding that there are today about 250 PC's connected to mainframes in CIA. All of us favor this, but we have discussed our security concerns on several occasions. I look to you to ensure (1) that we come to an expeditious decision about dealing with the security issues presented by desktop data storage, and (2) that before significant numbers of additional PC's are connected, we put in place an effective program to deal with our most pressing security concerns. It's my understanding that our presently placed test programs, if successful, should enable us to make major strides by the end of this year.
